READING

READING PASSAGE 1

You should spend about 20 minutes on Questions 1–13, which are based on Reading Passage 1 below.

The Rooftop Beekeepers

A Twenty years ago, a beehive on a city rooftop would have surprised most people. Today, hives can be found on office blocks, hotels and school buildings in many large cities. Supporters say that urban beekeeping reconnects people with nature and helps pollinate parks and gardens.

B The trend began in earnest in the early 2000s, when reports of falling bee numbers in the countryside reached the newspapers. City dwellers who wanted to help started keeping bees of their own, and local clubs began running weekend training courses for beginners.

C Surprisingly, city bees often do better than their rural cousins. Farmland may be covered with a single crop, which flowers for only a few weeks, while a city offers a mix of street trees, balconies and gardens that bloom from spring to autumn. Cities are also slightly warmer, so the bees can forage for longer each day.

D Not everyone is convinced. Some ecologists warn that too many hives in one area can leave too little food for wild bees, which are less visible but just as important for pollination. In one European capital, the number of hives grew so quickly that the council now asks new beekeepers to register.

E Honey from city hives is often described as having a more complex flavour than country honey, because the bees visit so many different plants. Tests have also shown that it is usually free of the pesticides sometimes found in honey from farming areas.

F For most urban beekeepers, however, honey is not the main reason they do it. Many say that looking after a hive has taught them to notice the seasons, the weather and the plants around them, and that this is the real reward.

TEST 1 PART 1

RECEPTIONIST	Good morning, Riverside Sports Centre. How can I help?
DANIEL	Hi, I'd like to join as a member, please.
RECEPTIONIST	Of course. Can I take your name?
DANIEL	Daniel. And my surname is Mitchell, M-I-T-C-H-E-L-L.	Q1
RECEPTIONIST	Thank you. And your address?
DANIEL	It's 42 Hilton Road, in Kingsley.	Q2
RECEPTIONIST	Is there a day that suits you best for classes?
DANIEL	Tuesdays are difficult for me, so Thursday would be better.	Q3
RECEPTIONIST	And what will you mainly be doing here?
DANIEL	I'll use the gym sometimes, but mostly swimming.	Q4
RECEPTIONIST	Then the standard plan is best. It's £35 a month.	Q5
DANIEL	That's fine. Do I need to bring anything?
RECEPTIONIST	Just a photo for your card, and a towel — we don't provide them.	Q6
DANIEL	Is there anywhere to leave my car?
RECEPTIONIST	Yes, parking is free for members from Monday to Friday.	Q7
DANIEL	Great. When could I start?
RECEPTIONIST	There's an induction this Thursday at 6.30 pm, with our instructor, Mr Okafor.	Q8 Q9
RECEPTIONIST	By the way, how did you hear about us?
DANIEL	My neighbour comes here — she recommended it.	Q10

Model answer — Writing Task 2

Whether cooking should be taught in schools or left to parents is a question that divides opinion. While there are good arguments on both sides, I believe schools should play a part.

Those who see cooking as a family matter argue that every household eats differently, and that parents are best placed to pass on their own recipes and habits. They also point out that school timetables are already full, and that adding cooking lessons would take time away from core subjects such as mathematics.

On the other hand, not every child grows up with a parent who has the time or skill to teach them. For these children, a few hours of practical lessons at school may be the only chance to learn how to prepare a simple, healthy meal. Cooking classes can also teach useful skills such as measuring, planning and working safely.

In my view, the two approaches work best together. Schools can give every child a basic level of skill, and families can then build on this at home. This would help young people become more independent and make better choices about what they eat.

In conclusion, although parents have an important role, schools are in a unique position to make sure that all children leave education able to cook for themselves.
